When it comes to a common European Defense Project, you are either in or out. Such a clause threatens the stability and efficiency of the chain of command. If the EU is to pool its military resources, including its troops, then the EU shall create a supranational Military Staff Committee whose decision shall be unaltered by any Member State. If the decision is made to deploy, then Member State must comply. I do reckon that such a point of view cleaving, but I feel like it is the only European Defense we should aim at, if that's the desire of the congress.

- 1 A European legal framework regulating how employees or civil servants who witness irregularities
2 can report them while ensuring that they are protected and confidentiality is maintained.
3 Reporting persons should preferably report through internal channels but should also be able to
4 report externally to the competent authorities. The reporting person should also have the right to 5 make the matter public in cases where:
- 6 1) He or she reported internally and externally or directly externally and the matter was not 7 addressed;
 - 8 2) The interest of the public prevails considerably in comparison with the interest of the 9 business to keep their matters private;
 - 10 3) There is a significant risk that reporting internally or externally would put him or her at risk or

Civil society was also earmarked support of an initial amount of €6 million. The previous EDF (2008-13) prioritised funding for human resources development as a priority and granted €98.1 million in the form of sector budget support and technical assistance; The example given is also not accurate, with Botswana's GDP amounting to 17.41 billion USD for 2017, vs. 56.83 Billion USD for Bulgaria for 2017.
